

Technology comes and goes but we will soon say goodbye to a familiar entertainment box. Technology seems to change quicker than I can keep up – with one recent exception. – The VCR (Video Cassette Recorder) and VHS tapes. A couple years ago I realized that most of the movies we were purchasing were on DVD, while we still clung to our favorite VHS tapes. In an effort to rightsize we decided to clear out the VHS tapes and make that old VCR obsolete. (This meant one less machine blinking the wrong time at us from our entertainment center!)

I made a list of the VHS movies we just couldn't live without and over several months went in search of DVD replacements. It was a real feeling of accomplishment when the last VHS tape went out the door. Should I confess right here and now that we still have the VCR boxed up in the garage "just in case". After today, out it goes!

What started this thought for me today was reading an article on the National Public Radio website about the VCR coming to an end. Literally, the only remaining company that produces VCR's is no longer producing them as of this August. At their peak production they were making 15 million VCRs each year. Last year they only produced 750,000 so the time has come. Click HERE to see this interesting article.

If you need to recycle your VCR, the local Goodwill store is a recycling site. They will also take your old VHS tapes as well. Just another way to downsize and resize to retirement living in Stillwaters Estates!

Quote of the Week:

“You never change things by fighting the existing reality.

To change something, build a new model that makes the existing model obsolete.”

– R. Buckminster Fuller
